soldiers installed earlier. They also ran an outdoor lighting system, much like street lamps in America.

Patterson, a Bellville, W. Va., native hopes his work will help the people of Adailou and make their lives better.

Sounds of eager children poured from a nearby classroom, mixing with the soldier's resonance of construction. The young students seem not to mind the hammering and noise of power saws. They know their library will soon be completely refurbished.

This project was a learning experience for some of the soldiers, but for others it was just another notch in their belt.

Ethiopian military, mission objectives include strengthening long-term relations with the Ethiopian Army and establishing working relations with locals.

Pleased with the progress made towards these objectives, Silhol offered praise for the locals he has encountered.

"The people we've come into contact with in Ethiopia have bent over backwards," Silhol said.

Silhol also said he is impressed with the Ethiopian Army's strict discipline in a setting of few comforts, an environment he hopes will leave an impression on Old Guard soldiers.

"There is no Morale Welfare & Recreation in the Ethiopian military, and I think our soldiers seeing that the Ethiopian Army works just as hard without these things will have a lasting impact," Silhol said.

Company soldiers will continue to operate CJTF-HOA missions out Camp United for the next several months.
